Meg McAndrews began her position as the senior director of donor stewardship at the University of Vermont Foundation in July 2011. She leads a team of stewardship and special events professionals in the execution of a comprehensive stewardship program. This includes the creation of a cumulative giving society with a focus on individual stewardship plans. Meg previously served as the associate director of stewardship at the Indiana State University Foundation.

Meg currently serves as the communications coordinator for the ADRP Board of Directors and adds her experience to the public relations committee. Prior to her board appointment, she served on the ADRP conference committee as the logistics/attendee experience chair in 2009 and 2010.

She holds a master's degree in Philanthropic Studies from the Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University, where she worked in The Fund Raising School. Meg has spent years studying nonprofit organizations and the philanthropic environment in the United States.
